

Mireia González
Team Leader

Persistence has brought me here. Hard work and determination have given me the opportunity to make a space for myself in DigiProces and prove to myself that I can achieve any goals I can imagine. And if I have been able to do so, we all can.

My mother works at DigiProces and she has always told me that electronics is the future. I, who worked endless hours in the restaurant business, wanted to change and turn my life around, but with basic studies and no experience in the sector, I found it difficult to enter the company.

Finally, I was lucky to access a summer internship at the age of 20 and that's how I got into DigiProces.

I sharpened all my senses to the maximum to soak up all. Everything interested me and aroused my curiosity. I had discovered the place where I would like to develop my professional career.

It was clear to me that I wanted to stay, so I did my best and got a temporary position. I bought a soldering iron and practiced at home with rejected boards.

I was decided to be the best operator. I would start studying electronics when arriving home, looking for answers to queries I didn't understand.

At that time my work varied according to production needs, but I wanted more. I wanted a permanent position here and the way to achieve that was to become a team leader, so that was my next goal. I knew that if I set limits to myself I was not going to get anywhere, so I just worked harder and harder.

The time came when a call for a team leader was opened, the position I wanted, but I did not apply. I didn't want to be the least bad option on a list of candidates, I wanted to be the priority. And in the end the moment turned up, my manager trusted me and made me team leader. And about two months later I got pregnant.

Back from my maternity leave, I had to combine my passion for this job with my family. Another challenge that I overcome every day and that I accomplish with a new philosophy of life. Being a mother has made me stop being impulsive and impatient, I am much more empathetic now and I believe much more in people. All this translates into the quality of work and the great atmosphere in the team.

I am 24 years old and DigiProces has changed my life. I entered as a girl who thought she knew everything and since I'm here I've learned everything.

The confidence and the opportunities that have been offered to me thanks to my effort, perseverance and willingness have changed my vision of myself. I came here unsteady and a lack of confidence and now I am much stronger mentally. I feel that I am able to meet all my goals.

What lies ahead of me? More training and experience to continue progressing. I feel highly valued and, with attitude, I know I will continue to surpass limits.

And if I think about the future, I believe that DigiProces could be a good place also for my son, why not? I've been good at fulfilling dreams so far...
